

- Ben
 - What are your top three strengths
 - Find the optimal way to do things (or at least try to)
 - Can communicate with others
 - Know how to type
 - How do you perform
 - Prefer to do work in larger chunks instead of spreading out
 - Forced to be a morning person
 - Professional time waster
 - What are your values
 - Like having fun
 - Want to get a good grade
 - Want to learn about the places I don't know as much about
 - What can you contribute
 - Ideas
 - Code
 - Other Stuff

From what I have seen both from previous projects I have worked with my teammates and the responses that they put on the Drucker Test I am primarily going to be coding. This means I will probably not be the only one programming but instead the one who does the bulk of it. I will have to work with my team specifically on planning what we need to do next and designing what it should do.

Abi's:

- What are your top three strengths
 - Peacekeeper
 - We can do it attitude
 - dependable
- How do you perform
 - Night owl
 - List maker (religious)
 - Needs a lot of time
- What are your values
 - Honestly

- Transparency
- Having Fun
- What can you contribute
 - User Experience
 - Realistic plan
 - Fun spirit

I will contribute a little on coding but I best suit user based work, organization, communication, and documentation the best. I will probably end up doing some coding, any text files that will be needed and organizing meetings.

Sam's List

Type 9

Strengths:

- Jack of all trades
- Planning
- Keeping people on task

Perform:

- With as less stress as possible (this means not waiting until the last moment)
- Need some help getting out of the house, but after that, I'm good to go
- Prefer afternoon to late at night

Values:

- Having fun
- Honesty
- Reliability

Contribute:

- Good planning
- Lots of ideas

- Design (from more of a UX/UI side)
- Can try to help with anything and everything

Although I cannot contribute much in the code, I will make tests in order to make sure our program works correctly. I will also help with any design we may need to do and help get any small things that need to be done, done!